Q12	The main cause of conflict in relation to forum selection is the discrepancy between interconnected world of internet and territorially divided blocks of many nation states. Those nation states have a plethora of different laws in different areas. It would be certainly a desired outcome if all countries could harmonize their differences and have laws and rules so that there is no longer any conflict of laws. Realistically, this is an impossibility while humans want to preserve sovereignty and power. Altogether a new paradigm on jurisdiction is needed. You are required to assume the role of a policy maker and draft a Model Ideal Law for regulation of the internet addressing the problem of jurisdiction and taking into consideration the major challenges faced by existing laws and proposing solutions to them. OR	CO4
	The Internet is the latest and in many respects most powerful in a line of media—telegraph, telephone, radio, television—that for many people have progressively eliminated time and space as obstacles to communication during the last century and a half. It has enormous consequences for individuals, nations, and the world. There are many issues and questions regarding laws and the internet. Because the internet is still fairly new, there are many	CO4

unanswered questions and precedence that have yet to be set. Also, "It is important to realize that the Web is what we make it. 'We' being the people who read, the people who teach children how to surf the Web, the people who put information up on the Web. The Web doesn't force anything down your throat."

Based on the following excerpt, enumerate the legal and ethical issues on the internet which pose major challenges in dealing with the problem of jurisdiction and proposing solutions to them.
